

BABY KIDNAPPED 30 YEARS AGO MAY BE A PRINCESS

Now Clue Gives Hope to Mrs.
Coulme of Clearing Up
Birth Mystery.

LEFT WITH NEGROES.

"Kate Jackson's" Personal
Directs "Count" to Her
Address.

The mystery that shrouds the early life of Mrs. Jamie Coulme of No. 13 St. Mark's place, a mystery that for more than thirty years Mrs. Coulme has tried without avail to pierce, may be lifted soon, if an advertisement recently appearing in New York is genuine. This advertisement would indicate that some person who has knowledge of Mrs. Coulme's birth and early life—things about which Mrs. Coulme knows nothing—is anxious now to have Mrs. Coulme learn of her parentage.

Mrs. Coulme believes she was kidnapped when a baby, and that the people who stole her were well paid to keep her identity hidden. She thinks she is a Cuban, and believes she is of a noble family, but after years of search she has been able to learn almost nothing authentic about herself.

The only thing in her possession that may some day help her to prove who she is, is an old fashioned silver spoon marked with the initials "I. B." or "J. B." in script. The spoon bears marks as though it had been used as a child's feeding spoon, and Mrs. Coulme says it was given her when she was a very little girl by an old mulatto woman who cared for her and who told her then that at some future time the spoon might establish her connection with her parents.

Personal for "Count."

The advertisement which appeared recently and which revived the story of Mrs. Coulme's search for a name and parents, read:

"Count J. B. Jackson. You will find right below the Prisoner's Chair at 13 St. Mark's place, New York. I derived my name from my duplicity. F. J. JACKSON."

Mrs. Coulme lives at No. 13 St. Mark's place, but she knows of no Princess Des Cartes, nor can she identify the Count to whom the advertisement is addressed.

Mrs. Coulme's inquiries lead her to believe that she was kidnapped from her parents in Cuba during the Ten Years' War. Two years ago an advertisement she inserted, asking information about herself, started a correspondence with an aged woman in Key West, Fla., a Mrs. Harvey. In one of her letters Mrs. Harvey suggested that Mrs. Coulme look up the newspaper accounts of a wedding celebrated at Grace Church in New York in the early sixties, which for its magnificence was known as the "Diamond Wedding."

Was "Diamond Wedding."

In 1859 Senator Don Estaban Santa Cruz de Oviedo, a wealthy Cuban planter, who married to Miss Frances Amelia Bartlett, who lived at that time at No. 14 West Fourteenth street. This wedding was known as the "Diamond Wedding" owing to the splendid jewels given the bride by her husband. Mrs. Harvey, in her letter, said that the bride and bridegroom at the "Diamond Wedding" were Mrs. Coulme's parents.

Mrs. Coulme's early recollection is of living in Key West, Fla., in charge of a negro family named Ferguson. She was told that her parents lived in Cuba and that she had been brought to Key West in a fishing smack after being kidnapped. She was adopted by a Spanish family named Filiano, and it was reported that these people were well paid to care for her. However, she was badly treated that she ran away from home, and after some years married Clement W. Coulme, an English writer.

Tells Her Strange Career.

Mrs. Coulme is a tall, dark woman about forty years old. Her hair is black and straight now, but she has been told, she says, that she had flaxen curls as a baby. All her earliest memories, she told the Evening World reporter, centered about two large white houses which stood in a grove of fruit trees. There was a young white woman who held her in her arms and a tall white man who wore a uniform with jeweled ornaments on his breast. There was also a room with a red carpet on it and a nurse maid called Amy or Emma.

The name of either Hays or Savannah is associated in her mind with these things. Then a negro who called her "The Little Rebel" carried her away and there followed a trip across water. Her childhood was spent mainly with negroes in Florida towns. First she would be in the care of one set of foster-parents and then another. Once when she lived at Fernandina a Dr. Parker came to the house of her guardians on some mysterious mission, and during his stay she was kept in the woods in charge of a negro named Harriet Gibson, who cared for her much of the time and who usually suffered her from one place to another.

Although she lived among negroes until she reached girlhood and says there were plenty of people in Key West and Fernandina who insisted that she was white and that she had been kidnapped in babyhood.

PATIENT ENDS LIFE IN ASYLUM AT SUPPER TABLE

Patrick Cooney, a patient at the Long Island State Hospital's Flatbush branch for the insane, committed suicide last night at the general supper table with a carving knife. He almost severed his head from his body. The act caused great excitement among the inmates, and it took the entire staff to get the frenzied patient under control.

Cooney's particular hallucination was that he was a king and everybody insisted on forcing money upon him, which hurt his singly pride. Apparently harmless, he was allowed more or less freedom about the asylum. He was stationed in the dining room last night to wait upon the other patients, when he grabbed a carving knife and in an instant slashed his throat.

The patients laughed at first, but soon were in panic when it was seen that Cooney was dead. All were sent back to their rooms.

When Cooney fell to the floor one of the male inmates climbed upon the table, struck an attitude and said: "Et tu Brute! Sic semper tyranni!" He was hauled down by an attendant and taken to his room.

Dr. Tracy and Dr. Duff pronounced Cooney dead. His body was taken to the Flatbush police station, preparatory to removal home.

93 Models of Women's Fancy Tailored Suits

COPIES OF PARIS IMPORTATIONS

45.00 to 110.00

All of these models are copies of the latest creations of celebrated Parisian modistes. Each is the exquisite conceit of some famed contributor to the realm of fashion, for in the French academy of dress there is no more illustrious nomenclature than this:

PAQUIN	PAUL POIRET	DRECOLL
FRANCIS	CHERUIT	BEER
JEANNE LANVIN	BESCHOFF DAVID	BERNARD
DOUCETT	CALLOT	AMY LINKER

Yet, reflect. In Paris, such garments as are offered here would approximate from 600 francs to 1,000 francs apiece, or 120.00 to 200.00 each. Add 60 per cent. duty and the cost will run from 192.00 to 320.00. Obviously, to-morrow you may purchase these beautiful creations at far less than they would cost you in Paris. And this is supplemented by American tailoring which is admittedly superior to any other. Yet superiority in a general way did not suffice. The care with which we selected these models was only to be equalled by the care with which we selected the manufacturers to reproduce them, for it was fitting that such notable designs should be duplicated by master hands.

The display includes Empires, Eatons, Cutaways, in both moderate and extreme effects, as well as the new Tourist Suit with 42-inch coat; garments of white brocade in a variety of models; and a new homespun suit whereof the skirt is faced with Duchess Satin to match lining of coat. This last is one of the latest and most charming models to arrive. Fourth Floor.

These French Blouses have just arrived

AND WILL BE ON DISPLAY TO-MORROW—THURSDAY

3.95 to 39.50

What very versatile mortals these Parisians are! And how precocious a genius it is that never attempts but it excels. What a simple garment is a blouse, yet Paris transforms it into a thing of beauty. These latest blouse importations are quite that, regardless of price. Every model has some feature to commend it—some deft, distinctive difference of design. The needlework itself exhibits the fine Parisian hand. The materials come in exquisite colorings, with elaborate embroideries. They include marquisette, voile, crepe, batiste and French lawn, with real Irish, Cluny, Filet or Val. laces, and white or colored embroideries in the newest designs. Large various shaped collars, collarless or jabot models. Third Floor.
